“Congress shall
make no law...
abridging the freedom of speech
or of the press.”

A vibrant democracy must have a free press, where facts are communicated, opinions expressed and information shared. It spurs healthy discussion among citizens and informs their decisions about how they wish to be governed and represented. It helps them effectively resolve serious issues in their society.

A free press is a safeguard against a totalitarian government that tells people what to think and how to act through a press that is not free—one that only represents the government view, excluding all others.

Freedom of expression is a core American value, established in the U.S. Constitution and affirmed repeatedly by the U.S. Supreme Court.

In the words of Thomas Jefferson,

“Our liberty depends on the freedom of the press, and that cannot be limited without being lost.”
